BY BRYAN A. BYBEE

It's official. With this very issue you're holding in your sweaty mitts, Exotic has turned 30! We certainly redefine the term "Dirty 30," and with the traditional 30th anniversary stone being a pearl, I think you can see which direction this could go. But not this month! We're gonna keep it clean and classy—if only for a month. Hey, we didn't choose the salacious life...it chose us.

Thirty years and 354 issues of Exotic (yeah, not a complete 360, but that's Rona's fault). You might notice that the current issue is labeled #353, so let's get that out of the way now. Somewhere along the way, we fucked up and repeated the same issue number... Being the overachievers that we're known for, we never bothered to find out where we botched it, and now it's set in stone. We live with it like that birthmark your friend has on her face, with thick speaker wire growing out of it. You tell her it's unique and adds character. You lied to her, just like we've been lying to you. So, now you know to +1 every time you see our issue number (at least until we fuck it up again...).

But enough with the high jinks...it's time to get serious for a moment. Thirty years is an absolute eternity for print media, especially for a publication born in the 1990s. Quite simply, print media has steadily suffered since the turn of the century—especially smaller, local and regional publications. Remember the Nickel Ads Classifieds? Their final issue was nearly a decade ago! Of those publications that actually made it to 2020, most received the final knockout blow from the pandemic. Both our local weekly/bi-weekly newspapers took massive hits, with one printing its first post-pandemic edition just this May—over three years later. Why the history lesson, you ask? Simply put, to outline and underline how improbable it is that Exotic is still in print.

That brings us to the why. First and foremost, we owe our existence to our supporting advertisers. They see value in our service to the industry, and we can't thank them enough for their continued support. We thank and appreciate all advertisers that have supported us over the last 30 years, but we'd like to specifically recognize those advertisers that have supported us consistently for 20 years or more—including this 30th Anniversary Issue:

Acropolis, Cabaret (formerly City Limits Showgirls and CJ's), Club SinRock (formerly Jody's Bar & Grill), Devils Point, Dream On, Dv8, Fantasy For Adults Only, Fantasyland, Gspot (formerly Palace of Pleasure), Guilty Pleasures (formerly Pallas), Hawthorne Strip (formerly Dino's), Stars Cabaret, and Ta-boo. We are truly grateful to all of you!

And to our loyal industry workers and patrons who also see value in our publication and our service to the industry, we love you and thank you for your support! Without you, we would have no reason to exist.

With that, it's on to the celebratory festivities! If you're wondering what 30 years of Exotic looks like, flip the page... and then flip it again. Yeah, it's a total flex, and we have zero shame about it. In fact, we're going to summon some of the incredible talent you'll see on the next four pages for our 30th-anniversary jamboree next month. We'll announce the date in next month's magazine and on Instagram, but plan on late August! Who knows, we might even have commemorative t-shirts available. Stay tuned!

THE P-TOWN HAPS

Exotic City wouldn't be complete without some event coverage, so here we go! Dick Hennessy's 12th Annual Virginia Beauty Pageant starts this month! We have all the important dates listed to the right, and make sure you check out the event spread on page 42.

We have another anniversary this month! Congratulations to Hawthorne Strip for reaching its 17th year! You can celebrate with them on Saturday, July 22. It's also Cabaret's 17th anniversary, but based on no mention in their ad this month, we think they might have forgotten! No worries, we remembered! Happy anniversary to both of you!

Also on Saturday, July 22, Stars Cabaret in Salem is hosting Foxy Boxing. Join them for some babe-on-babe brawls! You get to pick the winner, and there's merchandise to win. Drink specials for all, no less!

See you next month, dolcezze mio!

HANNAH ONE CUP'S BEGINNING OF SUMMER

As many of you are keenly aware by now, I loathe summertime...the sweltering heat, endless sunshine, and the numbered ways of attempting to escape these things with as little effort as possible. Summertime is the bane of my existence, and every year it's becoming harder and harder to "beat the living pulp" out of the summer heat. As a born, raised, and "lived just about everywhere" in the Pacific Northwest individual, I usually pride myself in the (sometimes ingenious) ways I survive these four months. So, as a treat, I thought I might share how the beginning of summer is going in this household and how everyone is coping with both myself and this excessively stupid weather we are starting to have. I'm also going to rate these on a scale from 1 (did not help the blistering thoughts of summer) to 5 (cool as a frozen cucumber before bringing it into the bedroom).

We Went Camping for the First Time in Oregon

My partner, being from "Fabulous Las Vegas, Nevada," has never had the luxury of camping in Oregon. Camping in Oregon, for me, usually entails a small propane grill to roast your 99-cent Bar S hotdogs on, some marshmallows, a sleeping bag, an air mattress (because everywhere in Oregon has knife-shaped rocks that are unapologetically trying to murder you), and a tent. The tent is usually big enough for an air mattress and three people (those three people usually being me, another person, and a dog).

Well, we had half of these things, thanks to REI. My partner smartly already had a tent that he claimed was big enough for him, our dog, and me. I will tell you now that it was not. Air mattress? What air mattress could you possibly need? REI has a handy, selfinflating...thing that inflates to 1/10 of an inch and will really make you feel like you're a true camper by "roughing it" on the death rocks. Food? Grill? Who needs them when you have 9-dollar, dry-ass meat sandwiches from Safeway just up the road? My partner also claimed he would be "catching us dinner," but this is where the 9-dollar sandwiches came in.

We also learned our dog is lightly claustrophobic, so this trip was filled with bumps in the night at all angles. We left promptly at 5:30 a.m. the next morning, unsure of the success of the whole venture.

Rating: 2 – Although the camping experience itself was a bust, and we didn't escape the heat being in The Dalles, there was a wonderful breeze and river with a temp of 30 degrees that we had the option of dying in if we so chose.

A Friend Came Down From Seattle and We Decided to Day Drink

I'm not much for day drinking. I'm more of a night creature by trade, so this was a little out of my element as it was. Couple that with the excessive heat wave at a sweltering 92 degrees, and you have yourself a proper, ripe Hannah. Fresh for the picking and ready for more alcohol. I can honestly say that my friend and I were trying to play it safe by having a large glass of water for each drink we had and eating a chili dog from Roake's. (Side note: if you don't like Roake's, then don't bother day drinking with me.)

Although our efforts were valiant, they could not compete with the sweat leaving our bodies and the excessive sun shining on our heads. My partner, thankfully, was our sober driver and drove us home. But not without me saying, "Wait, hang on," and vomiting outside the car window in traffic. Sorry, whoever was behind us that night. I was told we made day drinking look hard, to which I responded, "That's why I'm not a very good alcoholic."

Rating: 3 – Yes, I got sick, and yes, my friend and I completely wasted the next day on the couch. But we truly did stay hydrated and had a good time while doing so. It might have been crispy outside, but our bodies were perfectly toasted—inside. Also, wasting time on the couch meant we stayed nice and cool inside the house with the AC running and our blankets over our bodies—like adults.

I Got Tat-Toes

Along with day drinking a couple of weeks prior, my friend and I decided to finally get tat-toes done in Seattle, where they live. Yes, that is tat-toes. Your toes. Tattooed. You call it tat-toes (per another great friend behind the counter of Joe's in Seattle). We already had the idea planned out for what we would be getting, and we were finally able to go through with it. Before getting these done, however, we were to meet the artist at Joe's, where I was greeted by several people who I had never mentioned I was coming to Seattle. The whole thing felt like an odd, surprise homecoming to my home away from home. After having a quick alcohol and hugs at the bar, we speed-walked down to the tattoo parlor, where we both had our toes done—typical spa day.

Rating: 5 – It was perfectly rainy weather in Seattle, the temperature a wonderful 64 degrees, and I got to have drinks without worrying about the gallon of water I had to ingest. And I got a tattoo with my swamp kitty. Win-win-win.

I Visited My Dad and Looked at His Ridiculous Garden

It was my dad's birthday this last month, and I visited him at his home in Roseburg, where he sits on top of a mountain peak, away from civilization—just how he likes it. My dad is ingenious, to put it nicely. Sometimes he comes up with an idea and puts the plan into motion before considering the actual possible outcomes. I give you the “mound of dirt” garden implementation:

His laziness the day his dirt was delivered and his ingenuity have granted him the ability to start and hold successful gardens on mounds of loose dirt. It's all very scientific and based on when the sun gods are hitting a specific patch of the dirt. Hence the exceptionally large and incredibly happy...er...special tomato plants you see growing.

This trip was filled with an air-conditioned pizza restaurant and a smooth breeze outside the front door of his house, overlooking his pile of fruitful land and three stupid dogs.

Rating: 4 – I would say 5; however, part of this trip included me discovering that roaches were a real thing in Oregon. I've lived here my whole life and never come across one, but now I know, and so do you. They are disgusting and run away from you faster than your hand with a ceramic mug can bash it down to kill it.

And that, my sexy readers, is how the beginning of summer is going for me so far, as well as the ratings I give to these things on how successful it was at helping forget about global warming for a minute. I also wanted to give a quick shout-out to this publication since 30 years old is almost as old as I am, and for it to still be considered relevant to readers/viewers makes my black heart giggle. Thanks for enjoying our beautiful people and entertaining reads for this long. I'm glad to have entertained you all for the few years I have so far.

THE DALTON APPROACH

Customers often show interest in my job and want to talk about it with me, sometimes at length. I'm always happy to oblige. I enjoy what I do and love friendly encounters with my customers. The conversations are pretty similar, and I get many of the same questions, which I don't mind at all—it allows me to have cookie-cutter answers ready and waiting. "Do you have to fight a lot?" No, most people know how to behave themselves, and de-escalation is a better way of approaching my job. "What's the craziest thing you've seen working out here?" I once witnessed a homeless guy give himself the Cheddar Bob treatment (if you've never seen 8 Mile, there's a character named Cheddar Bob who accidentally shoots himself in the dick, which is precisely what our unfortunate homeless neighbor did—don't play with guns, kids). During these customer conversations, one topic that pops up every now and then is the bouncer movie. I'm talking about Patrick Swayze's 1989 cult classic Road House. Work as a bouncer long enough, and someone will bring it up.

Now, this flick gets a lot of shit. It did poorly at the box office, only gaining popularity once it hit the home video and cable TV markets. The Official Razzie Movie Guide: Enjoying the Best of Hollywood's Worst lists Road House in Chapter Five: "Now That's A Dumb Idea!" In an episode of Family Guy, Peter and Brian pick up a copy at a video store and watch it together. After the movie ends, Peter comments on the timelessness of the movie's message, to which Brian responds, "Peter, the only message in that movie is that every problem in life can be solved by kicking." Peter eagerly embraces that message, to the annoyance of everyone around. Is that really all there is to Road House though? Sure, on its surface, it seems like the official violent jackoff fantasy of Toxic Masculinity™, and admittedly, the second half of the film goes off the rails in a big way. Still, Swayze's character Dalton has some legitimate gems to offer those of us working as bouncers.

For starters, let's talk about Dalton's background. The dude has a degree in philosophy from NYU. That detail jumped out at me when I recently re-watched it, recalling a quote by Thucydides I read a long time ago: "The society that separates its scholars from its warriors will have its thinking done by cowards and its fighting done by fools." When thinking and fighting are both tools in your toolbox, you'll have an easier time knowing which one the situation calls for. More often than not, it'll be thinking, but as they say, everything looks like a nail if a hammer is all you've got. A degree in philosophy is not a prerequisite for bouncer work, but at least learn stuff. Engage in intellectual pursuits. Read some books. The best bouncers I know are the ones who make use of that grey stuff sloshing around their skulls.

Then there's the legendary Wade Garrett, played by Sam Elliott. Wade plays the role of mentor to Dalton. When Dalton realizes he's in over his head, it's Wade whom he calls for help. There's another thing we can learn from Dalton. His reputation as a bouncer/cooler is such that Tilghman (the owner of the Double Deuce who recruits Dalton to get his security situation under control) doesn't blink when Dalton demands five grand upfront, plus 500 bucks a night, plus medical expenses. It would be easy for that kind of reputation to go to a guy's head, but Dalton still possesses the humility and self-awareness (good traits to possess in this line of work) to recognize when he needs advice and/or backup.

When Dalton starts at the Double Deuce, he gives his bouncers a set of rules that, frankly, ought to be adopted industry-wide. Let's take a look at those rules.

Rule One: Never underestimate your opponent. Expect the unexpected.

Underestimating people is never a good idea. There are so many things to consider when dealing with a security situation. Anger issues, mental illness, drugs, fighting experience, or martial arts training—all these things come into play. A small person isn't necessarily weak, and a person who appears calm as you deal with them might act that way to lull you into a false sense of security. The opposite is true, as well. A large person isn't necessarily dangerous just because they're large; they might be weak or clumsy, and sometimes a person who seems agitated might have a legitimate concern, which, when addressed, might diffuse the situation entirely (and that person could end up being a really great customer after that). A situation isn't always what it appears on its surface. Take a moment to observe and evaluate. It might give you some useful insight that isn't readily apparent.

Rule Two: Take it outside. Never start anything inside the bar unless it's absolutely necessary.

Take it outside. If a situation turns, shall we say, kinetic, it's better for that to happen outside. A brawl in your establishment is the last thing you want. Dalton mentions on his first night at the Double Deuce, "People who want to have a good time won't come to a slaughterhouse." To point out the obvious, "outside" is bigger than "inside." Unless you're talking about the TARDIS, but we're discussing Road House, not Doctor Who. It's better to diffuse a situation than to let it become a brawl, but if a brawl is going to happen, better that it's not inside where lots of people are in a smaller space. Broken glass, property damage, and injuries to innocent bystanders will be much less likely once you take it outside.

Rule Three: Be nice.

Such a simple rule, but it seems to be the easiest rule for bouncers to forget while on the job. Dalton immediately expands on this rule: "If somebody gets in your face and calls you a cocksucker, I want you to be nice. Ask him to walk. Be nice. If he won't walk, walk him. But be nice. If you can't walk him, one of the others will help you, and you'll both be nice. I want you to remember that it's a job. It's nothing personal." Some of the bouncers find this rule to be a sticking point, with one guy asking incredulously, "Being called a cocksucker isn't personal?" Dalton's response is one that a lot of bouncers could stand to hear and take to heart: "No. It's two nouns combined to elicit a prescribed response." Letting someone's words provoke you unnecessarily will always cloud your judgment. As a period at the end of the sentence of rule three, Dalton tells the bouncers, "I want you to be nice until it's time to not be nice." Everyone at your establishment will have a much better time if you can be friendly with everyone until they entirely eliminate that option. Not every situation needs to be a fight. Dalton's first order of business at the Double Deuce is to fire a bouncer named Morgan because he doesn't have "the right temperament for the job." One of the best professional compliments I've ever been given was a friend who told me he thought I was the best de-escalator in the neighborhood. Dalton refers to himself as a "cooler." It's the same thing. Like I said before, it's a better way of doing my job.

Road House is currently on Netflix. Pop some popcorn, give it a watch, and keep in mind that while kicking can solve some problems in life, Swayze showed us a better way to bounce.

Nate Hazen is a professional de-escalator and movie buff. His degree is in mechanical engineering, not philosophy. Follow him on Instagram @natehazen (because creatively naming social media pages is not one of his intellectual pursuits) and @stripcitytv (because creative writing is).

CURSE OF THE COCAINE HIPPOS

There's been a lot of talk about cocaine-related animals in media lately, with the release of the modern B-movie Cocaine Bear, which is loosely based around a true story wherein a bear had stumbled upon a drug cache, and decided to consume something on the order of 2 kilos of pure Bolivian white. I suppose that would have made him the most dangerous apex predator on the planet until such time as he had a heart attack and died. Cocaine hippos, though? Well, that's a matter which requires a little more explanation.

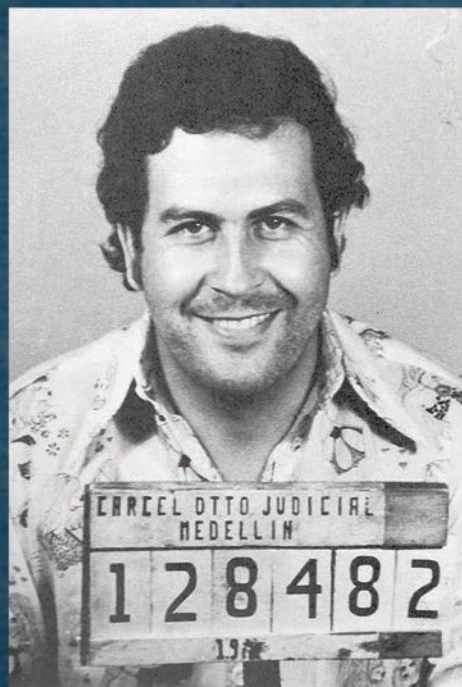

Let me start by setting the scene: it's the 1980s, at the height of the drug war. You're a rich cartel leader who knows no bounds in furnishing your many houses to the height of opulence.

For some reason, this opulence included a whack of hippopotamuses. Hippopotami? Er, let's just say "a gang of hippos." Also, many other illegally obtained exotic animals.

The cartel leader was Pablo Escobar. He was basically a household name in both the USA and his native Colombia, running an empire of cocaine production for export to the drug-hungry United States, where he could make more money than selling it to the other less-developed countries around him. It was a high-risk game, and everyone knew he was playing it. The locals in Colombia thought of him as a Godfather-like figure who was typically benevolent with his money, helping the poor and the community at times but also capable of great violence and anger.

A lifetime of building a blow empire naturally leads to fantastic wealth. So, what does one do with such wealth? Build a bunch of nice houses, get some cool cars, buy crazy art, and dress like some sort of pimp crossed with a soccer player. Sure, all that sort of thing. This includes a ranch full of animals, some of which were hippos.

I must wonder how the whole hippo thing came to the table. Did someone bend his ear and say something like, "I know a guy who has a hookup on some hippos," or did he have a natural inclination or fascination with them already? It doesn't seem to me like one would really need to be talked into buying hippos, and it's not like a used hippo salesman is waiting at the lot to try and sucker you in. It definitely feels like something you'd have to be determined to do. I don't think that the words "fuck it, I guess I'll take the hippo" have ever been uttered. This leads me to my next line of inquiry: where in the hell do you get hippos? They aren't from South America, they're from halfway around the world in Africa, and I'm pretty sure you can't just put them in a pet carrier on a Delta Airlines flight. Though I dunno, they kinda let a lot of stuff slide back then in the good old pre-TSA days.

So, now we know why they are cocaine hippos. They didn't do any cocaine... well, so far as I know. Getting a hippo all coked out seems like a bad idea, given that they are quite seriously the most deadly animal in Africa, killing something around 500 people per year, and also that it would probably take a phenomenal amount of hippo nose candy to get them geeked and ready for the club. No, they were merely purchased with drug money. The cost Mr. Escobar paid for three females and one male hippo is unknown, as it was not exactly listed in his expense accounting, but they have had a long-term impact.

Pablo Escobar died in 1993 after a rival who was in government sent a hit squad of special forces soldiers to "bring him in." This resulted in a running gun battle in the middle of a residential neighborhood and ended with Pablo taking bullets in many places, which led to his demise. He died on a rooftop, riddled with gunshot wounds, and remains dead to this day. His funeral was attended by roughly 25,000 people, but enough about him.

Following his death, all his various properties were either confiscated by the government or simply left to rot. The ranch, Hacienda Napoles, was one of those left to rot (until relatively recently, when it was bought and turned into an amusement park). Sometime after his death, the hippos made a daring escape and went to Colombia's vast and expansive Magdalena River for bold aquatic adventures.

What's the problem? Well, hippos are considered one of the most invasive species in the world, behind zebra mussels, Asian carp, kudzu, and cane toads. They consume native vegetation at an alarming rate in order to sustain their massive bulk, erode riverbanks, spray their feces everywhere (search "hippo muck spreading" online if you really wanna know about that one), and are generally dickheads—occasionally even attacking humans, who must surely say to themselves, "Is that a fucking hippo?" before running. Though, since it is Colombia, they probably say it in Spanish. "¿Eso es un jodido hipopótamo?"

As it goes, that one male with a small harem of lady hippos, having no natural predators and free reign in the tropical rivers of Colombia, exploded in population. They've likely gotta be inbred as hell, but that ain't stoppin' 'em from fucking. From four simple country hippos has come a population estimated between 180 and 215 of them as of the beginning of 2023. Hippo females gestate for approximately eight months (thanks, National Geographic, for that fact) and can reproduce every other year. Given that they can squirt out calves for nearly their entire up-to-forty-year lives...that's a lot of hippos.

Efforts being made to stop these hippos have included the following:

- Capturing and selling them to zoos in India.
- Flat-out killing them. This is apparently very difficult, even when you have an elephant gun. Need a hippopotamus gun, I guess. We'll get those saucy Brits from bespoke safari-gun maker Holland & Holland right on it. ("Oi, this'll stop an 'ippo right in 'is tracks! Kicks like a mighty 'orse, but is only 120,000 pounds, and that's me robbin' meself.")
- Trapping and neutering them at a remarkable expense to taxpayers.
- Giving people dart guns full of birth control drugs and telling them to shoot the hippos in order to keep them from breeding. (Yes, they seriously did this.)
- Hitting them with rolled-up newspapers and going, "Bad hippo! Get out!"
- Taunting them about their weight.

Criticism of these measures has been drawn by some of the citizens, who apparently are not concerned about "animal rights" or any of that horse shit, but instead, because they, being an industrious people, had built small resort-like settings where tourists come exclusively to see the hippos! Truth really is stranger than fiction.

Speaking of truth being stranger than fiction, a judge in the USA had declared that these hippos could be legally recognized as having the rights of persons. Of course, US law has no bearing on Colombia, who likely heard about this and said something to the effect of, "If you wanna take these hippos, put little hats on them or something, and let them fuck up your shit instead of ours, be our guest."

Thus, the hippo population continues to grow out of control. So long as nobody has a decent solution, it will continue to expand until such time as the population of Colombia is entirely made up of hippopotamuses. This friends, is the Curse of the Cocaine Hippos.*

Whose side will you take in the upcoming human/hippo wars?

McMenamins

FOUR OLD THINGS THAT MCMENAMINS SHOULD TURN INTO ONE OF THEIR OVERPRICED BOOMER PLAYGROUNDS

By Blazer Sparrow

After attending two back-to-back shows at Portland's very own beloved Crystal Ballroom in the sweltering Oregon summer heat, that takes place in May now, thanks to climate change, I got to thinking...maybe some of these old buildings that McMenamins goes to obsessive lengths to preserve, should be torn down. I kid. Back off, olds. I love old shit as much as the next underemployed English major. I even got their stupid little treasure hunt passport that I haven't remembered to bring to one of their establishments in years. I get the gimmick. It works. It's fine. Just for God's sake, I don't care what part of the building you have to tarnish the original woodwork of...just please put a fucking HVAC in the Crystal Ballroom. I'm not an engineer or an architect or even much of a writer, but I am confident it can be done. Maybe if I'm loud or repeat myself enough, it'll happen.

Until it happens, I have been thinking about the little Nostalgia Empire that McMenamins controls across the Pacific Northwest and wondering what other old things they can buy, throw a coat of varnish on, and then get some wage slaves to sling overpriced drinks and mediocre food in. The possibilities are endless, and I'm honestly surprised Lord McMenamin himself hasn't thought of any of these. If any of these becomes a reality, I will be demanding a percentage.

The USS Blueback Docked by OMSI

If there's something that old, rich dads in sandals and Hawaiian shirts love more than The Grateful Dead, it's fucking war machines. Especially if they're older. I used to bike by this byproduct of the military-industrial complex every day to work, and it finally hit me just now that this would be the perfect spot to sit cramped next to your family that hates you and eat Cajun tots 'cause they're the only good thing on the menu. Just kidding—I like a good Rubinater. Snot-nosed kids on a field trip to OMSI aren't gonna admire the technical marvels of this underwater attack penis like a group of drunk fiftysomethings on the way to a Blazers game.

The Entire Fucking Lloyd Center

I'm getting ahead of the curve here. Malls are a thing of the past. They are a modern relic, and it's up to someone with lots of money to preserve at least one before they're all bulldozed to make room for Amazon warehouses or some bullshit tech startup campus. In retrospect, malls really will be a weird cultural blip, and it'll be important for folks a century from now to at least have a physical example to look at because trying to describe it in words will seem impossible. What were those barbaric dolts of the late 20th century thinking?!? A concentrated communal market to bring people together that also isolated itself from any real living space 'cause it needed a small country's worth of parking? Also, why is there an ice rink? Anyway. Lord McMenamin should just buy this whole place now and have a little Boomer Walkable Vacation Paradise that would put Edgefield to shame. It doesn't make sense now, but as more and more of these archaic structures get demolished, it'll become the ultimate tourist attraction. Each vendor stall could be its own little overpriced pub. They could have mock kiosks dotted throughout, pretending to sell smartphones. See, back in those days, those ugly fucking goggles you're wearing? The primitives, back in the early oughts, had a version that they had in their pockets that they had to use their hands with. The brewers better get on making an orange hazy pale called the Orange Julius. Hot Topic sounds like some kind of spicy sandwich.

The Shanghai Tunnel Network Under Old Town

The thing is, most of the surviving Old Town bars and restaurants use this tunnel system as their storage and break room. I'm not sure how the legality of it works. I know that the walking tours can bring mouthbreathing tourists through whenever they please, so there must be some kind of grey area. If anything screams Old Portland Nostalgia, it's the made-up stories about sex workers falling down elevator shafts and haunting downtown pizzerias. Yes. Made up. Sorry. I know the guy who made it up to get more business. Pull off the ghost mask, and you'll realize capitalism was the monster all along. Either way, this is a goddamn goldmine for His Royal Highness, the Duke of McMenamin. A bunch of sepia-toned old photographs of old sailors and whores, cavorting in the seedy watering holes from the turn of the century. Fabulous moustaches and exquisite flapper dresses. Scavenger hunts in that little passport thing to find the names of murdered maidens and shanghaied drunkards etched into bricks that were actually etched by greedy small business owners. And you're underground! Far away from the tent dwellers on the dirty streets above that terrify the olds and the rich.

The Original Mary's Location

It honestly surprises me that there's not a McMenamins Strip Club yet...or at least a burlesque show. No nipples, panties on. That's family-friendly, right? I don't know what Disney says is okay these days. Before I get any pushback, most of the Earl of McMenamins' establishments are 21 and over. These are playgrounds for adults, not for children. And this is Portland. It's up there with the Blazers and being on fire every day Fox News says it is, as an identifying factor of the city. We already have the Acropolis. McMenamins should put their hat in the ring. And the oldest strip club in Portland? Come on! It screams "McMenamins Old Mary's" or something equally cringey. I don't care what structural damage to that building caused Mary's to move to a bigger and safer building two blocks away. Lord McMenamin clearly cares not for the safety or integrity of the buildings he owns. It's part of the charm—just like that sagging ceiling! The pole will hold it up...
